Educating yourself about computers and software programs represents a very expensive proposition in both time and money.

Anyone who has ever seen those Video Professor advertisements on TV knows that a simple tutorial on CD-Rom costs $59 plus shipping and handling. Most people don't realize computer and software training is readily available online, some of it as good or better than the introductory courses that can cost you a lot of money.

Would you like to learn how to set up a web page? Do you want to learn how to use your word processor for accomplishing more than just typing simple letters? How about learning to use all the great "secret" features in your email program?
