

"Learning From Fido" (or, the real gurrurus online)

By Larry Johnson

"Learning From Fido" (or, the real gurrurus online)

Larry Johnson
webmaster@bizsitebiz.hypermart.net

Biz Site Biz E-zine <http://www.BizSiteBiz.com>

If dogs were teachers we would all learn a great deal about life, love, and work including the internet.

I received a simple e-mail message from one of my online friends recently that pointed out some of the traits of dogs which are positive, admirable, and worthy of imitation.

For example: Dogs always run to greet you when you come home and they are happy to see you. No questions about where you have been or why you were late. They are just very happy that you are home.

They are great at knowing when to take a nap or on warm days they know when to stop and lie back in the grass and relax.

One of our Poms that we had was good at reminding me when it was time for a break from the computer by jumping up on my leg for some attention.

On hot days, they drink lots of water and find a nice shade tree to get under.

When they are happy, they just dance around and wag their entire bodies.

No matter how often they are scolded, they don't bear grudges...they just run right back and make friends.

Most dogs will avoid biting when a simple growl will do. ( Could this be applied to some

